NEW BUGS THREATEN TO DESTROY CORN CROP OF AMERICA

vour the grain, sap the vitality of the stalk, and sometimes cause it to rot and die. The loss is often more than sixty percent and may be almost total. A million borer have been estimated to inhabit an acre of corn.
The borer spends the winter in the corn stalk, and toward spring rolls himself up in a cocoon. Of his own manufacture. After a brief sleep he (or she) hatches out as a moth and starts the process all over again. The moth lives only a month at most, but in that time it finds a mate and the pair produce from 300 to 1,200 eggs.
Moths Spread Pest.
It is the moths that cause the spread of the pest. When they first hatch out, they crawl up the stalks of corn. Often wind helps them along. The fact that an infected area of 400 square miles was more than tripled as the result of two hatchings of the moths, gives an idea of how fast these creatures can travel. It would not take many generations for them to cross the continent, populating it as they went.

The weak spot in the borer's way of life is the half of spending the winter in a dry corn stalk. By burning all the corn stalks in an infected area, and also all the other stalks of plants in which the borer has been exterminated in a single season. Theoretically, but not practically! Last year the state of Massachusetts spent $75,000 and the state of New York $100,000 burning up infected stubble and fodder and weeds. They had quite a little army of men in the field, and directed by scientists from the Bureau of Entomology here. In spite of these efforts, however, the borer was managed to extend his range over 800 percent.

The Bureau of Entomology is now asking congress to appropriate half a million dollars for a grand assault on the pest. The borer has been found in most infected areas in New York and New England next year. W. R. Walton, who is in charge of the work, says that the amount is really small. It would pay to spend five millions if the ravages of the borer could be checked, for the damage he is doing will quickly reach a much larger figure than that. But with the half million an experiment can be made on a fairly large scale and perhaps a method of combating the pest can be worked out. The scientists will hire thousands of laborers to burn up infected material along the edge of the infected area. What is too wet to burn will be steamed. At the same time some work will be done all through the infected area.
Don't Believe They Can Do It.
The scientists say frankly that they do not believe the borer can be exterminated. At least not in a single year. But a good many of them, but he has never exterminated an insect pest. All the insect pests we ever had or are now having, he says, are being kept in check by natural enemies. But after a certain length of time, a sort of truce is reached between man and any particular bug. Natural enemies develop to reduce its abundance. Scientists learn how to combat it and teach the farmers how. Thus farmers in the southwest have practically outwitted the alfalfa weevil by changing their methods of planting and irrigating. The greatest danger from an imported pest is always in the first few years after it arrives. Like the human immigrants, it seems to find the land of the free a remarkably stimulating place. Like them, it tends to become more prolific. And most important of all, it has left all of its natural enemies behind, and it takes a while for new ones to develop.
Hence the next few years are the crucial years in the career of the corn borer. If its spread can be checked, or at least slowed down, the pest may be gotten completely under control before it reaches the corn belt. But if it continues to advance at its present rate of speed we face lean years.

Voice of the People

To the Editor: A little incident this morning brought vividly to mind articles in periodicals encouraging boys and girls to go to the country, woods, fields and along fences and gather wild fruit for home canning and to sell—they called it thrift—and brought strongly to light the other side of the question. A friend of mine, who was talking with a woman in a sick room, I noted a dish of wild plums on kitchen table, and a tooth that since childhood, yearned at plum time, asserted its claims. Knowing the warm hearts in farm homes, I remarked: "I see you have wild plums," frankly expecting a generous "help yourself" and perhaps a few to take along, but the answer came, "I had plums, but you have sold all you care to spare."
"No, too busy and ill to get there first. Someone thought that needed them worse than I did."
"You mean they were stolen?"
"That's what we call it. In this case, I had rather they had taken their value from my purse, they were my favorite fruit, and all we had. We depended on them. I rescue those few, but feel sorry for the little woman."
"A woman!"
"Just a girl, and a nice one, enjoying the work, until I at her side, filled with stored up indignation or vengeance. There were corn fields each side and woods beyond, and whether there were one or more with her, the plums were gone. I was greatly disappointed, but it is the regular thing. Apples, grapes, berries, grapes, nuts, bushels of nuts, even taken from sheds after shucked—or when spread to dry—are taken year after year.
"I prefer to think usually the gatherers think them wild and free to public, but if they would have the courtesy to inquire, the farmer not desiring for own use would give hearty permission to gather, and save much hard labor."
She assured me it must have been city people, as all neighbors know conditions and would have offered to gather on shares. She said she had often wished fruit and nuts might be set all along highways for refreshing weary travelers, but selfishly defeating the purpose. She spoke of one farmer who cut down a fine apple tree and because no fruit was left for them. "No trespass" signs laid to protect berries, in which case I see no difference between them and chicken thieves.

Newspapers say that "considering Japan's repeated assurances that Shantung is to be returned to China, the committee's attitude is unnecessarily insulting and provocative."

HOW TO READ A NEWSPAPER

By Katherine Taylor
Francis W. Parker School
"Gimme the funnies, Dad, you can have the rest of it."
It was the day of the signing of the peace treaty. The papers were crowded with great and thrilling news from Europe, but John sat there in the train and stared for an hour at the "funnies."

He had read every word. It took him three hours.

Which is the right way to read a newspaper—this man's way, or John's? Neither of them. The man wasted a great deal of time in reading useless paragraphs. But John wasted his time too. He had helped celebrate in the streets, but the actual facts in the paper about the peace seemed dull and not worth reading.
Some news is dull because it is about things not worth remembering. Some news seems dull because you do not understand it. Begin now to find out which is which. Father or mother will be glad to help.
Make up your mind to find the real news and to understand it. Try the cartoon. It is like a picture puzzle. There is something to laugh at in the picture but there is a meaning underneath.
Try the headlines. They are short, but tell much. Try to lift out the meaning from the articles. There is a strike with the men or with the employers? Why? There is a new republic starting in Europe. What are its problems? There is a new invention. How will it change things?
A newspaper is like the menu card in a big hotel. You must choose certain things and digest them before you can enjoy any good. Everyone should learn to be his own "Literary Digest." ("Find out for yourself.") Do it next week.

DESERTED HOMES IN THE TREES

By Adella Belle Beard
Author, Artist; Secretary Girl Pioneers of America

There are not many nests in the trees compared with the number of birds. A surprisingly large proportion of these wonderful little creatures, with wings to carry them to almost any height, return from their flights and snuggle down close to old Mother Earth when the time comes to build their homes.

Besides the ground builders there are many birds that build in low bushes within hopping distance of the ground, and many more in tangled thickets a few feet higher, which are veritable bird apartment houses holding many families. After that, lower limbs and sheltering holes in old trees are chosen, which leaves only a few birds that care for the tree tops as home sites.

It is easy enough to find the Baltimore Oriole's nest if you are in its neighborhood because, instead of being on the top of a limb, it is near the extreme end of an overhanging branch (often of an elm tree) and hangs down like a deep pocket, swaying in the breeze and safe from all enemies except those that fly. If you can get the nest down you will find it woven of fine grasses, plant fibre, wool yarn, string and strips of cloth, and lined with fine grass and hair. And you will notice that the lower part is strong and compact while the sides are loosely woven to allow the air to enter.

Don't mistake the White-throated Vireo's hanging nest for the Oriole's! It is pocket shaped but not so deep. The Orchard Oriole builds in a tree, not a hanging nest, but basket-like and carefully woven of fresh, green grass, which makes it difficult to see among the green leaves. It is securely lacquered.

CHURCHES HOLD SERVICES IN OWN EDIFICES AGAIN

With the coming of September, the local church societies begin again their regular program of work for the year, after the union services of the vacation period. By a fortunate coincidence, each pastor has been enabled to take a brief vacation, and yet have his church work taken care of, services being held in alternate churches, and union services in the evening in the park.

Rev. J. A. Melrose of the Federated church announces a series of sermons, for September. Those for the evening will take that some of the problems connected with industrialism which are having thoughtful attention at this time.

Rev. Raymond Pierson of the Baptist church has planned a series of sermons for Sunday evenings, on the "Supreme Realities of Life." The Sunday school rooms of this edifice have been repainted and redecorated. The people of the Methodist church are happy over the tasteful decorations which have taken place in their church this summer, and while the pastor, Rev. F. F. Lewis, was away yesterday attending a conference of the church, yet he plans to be back in the harness this coming week. His place in the pulpit was filled by Dr. E. Robb Zaring of the Northwestern.

The thought was that some Christ was the greatest artist the world had known, and that all people can be artists in the highest sense if they follow in his footsteps. He contended that it was impossible for a worldly man to keep his emotions to himself, that it must have expression, and that in expressing lofty emotions in a perfect manner, showed that one was an artist. He defined an artist as one of the rare order as possessing two things: Great thoughts and emotions surging up within which must find an outlet, and ability to give proper expression to those emotions.

He emphasized the thought that the religion of Christ was as beautiful and living a thing now as it had ever been, and that the common people, and working men as a rule, honored and loved Jesus, as never before, but that they did not care for the church because it had not lived up to its opportunities, and grown into the beautiful thing that it ought to be. Robert Lane sang a solo, "Crossing the Bar," and the chorus choir directed by Clara Shawan, sang an anthem, "There is a Land."

Training School to Give Reception

The Rock County Training school will hold its annual reception to new members, Wednesday evening.

The committee on arrangements comprises the Misses Marie Dobson, Cecile Popanz, and Hattie Heag. Music, plays and games, a few talks, and their serving of refreshments will constitute the evening's program.

To small branches and you may find it in the orchard or built in other trees. With the leaves gone and the nest turned yellow it is easier to find.

The tiny nest saddled usually on a high branch, and beautifully covered with lichen so that it looks like part of the tree, belonged to the Ruby-crowned Kinglet, a small bird, and the nest, little, deep cup-shaped nest in the crotch of the tree is where the Redstart lived.

The Company is not personally owned or controlled by one or two men.

The stockholders have conferred full authority and sole responsibility for the handling of the Company's affairs in a Board of Directors of seven men.

These men have come up from the ranks and risen to their present position because they have demonstrated unusual ability in their particular division of this highly specialized industry.

The Board of Directors measure the success of their trusteeship not by earnings alone, but by the service the Company renders the people at large.

They know that the earnings available for dividends are always in direct proportion to the degree of usefulness and character of service rendered.

It is this ideal of management which has developed the Company to its present proportions as a public servant.

STRIKES AND EXPORTS.

Strikes and exports are spoken of editorially as follows in the New York Times:

"Those who are threatening to 'paralyze' the steel industry by a strike, and all who are inclined to support them, should take thought about the effect of such paralysis upon our large and growing export trade in iron and steel, which has even invaded the British home market. Production has been increased steadily in the last few months and about 20 percent of the output is sold abroad, not only in markets formerly controlled by British manufacturers—as in India, where imports from America have risen from the old 3 percent of the total to 41 percent—but also at the very doors of England and Welsh factories. In May our exports were 447,500 tons and those of Great Britain only 208,179. The quantity shipped to foreign consumers rose to 544,580 tons in June. This may be compared with an average of about 250,000 before the war.

"Prices are much higher in England than in the United States. This was pointed out in the house of commons a few weeks ago by Sir Auckland Geddes, a member of the cabinet. He said, and only $50 here; $87.50 must be paid for English ship plates, while the price in America was $70, and British pig iron, at the base of the industry, was sold at $40, against $30 for iron in this country. A tariff preference of 12 1/2 percent in favor of the British product does not prevent sales of large quantities of American hardware in Australia, where some are now calling for an increase of the preferential rate in order that the mother country's undersold manufacturers may be protected. American rails have been sold in British price, our steel billets are offered there at a larger reduction, and even the local market for the tin plate of Wales cannot be held. The price here is $7 a box, while that of the Welsh product is $8.50 there. High ocean freight rates do not prevent competition, and an English order for 300,000 boxes was recently divided by American and Welsh manufacturers.

"At the annual meeting of a prominent English company, Aug. 28, the officers said that American selling steel there below the company's cost was a serious matter. This cost has been increased by strikes in coal mines and elsewhere, and by such wage additions as are demanded by those who talk of paralyzing the steel industry here. While paralysis would seriously affect construction work in our own country, it would check a great and profitable export trade. The changes demanded would so increase the cost of production that foreign manufacturers might regain their old export markets at our expense. Here is something for organizers of strike disturbances to think about."

NEEDED LEGISLATION.

Delay in ratifying the peace treaty seriously interferes with the progress of much necessary legislation. The Edge bill, which aims to provide means for establishing foreign credits, is practically at a standstill, although there is little opposition and the need of passing the measure is urgent. Our export trade may suffer, because Europe is quite unable to pay for needed goods in either money or merchandise. For our own good we must sell on credit, and the sooner some adequate plan is put into execution the better for all concerned. Railroad plans are still in process of formation. Government ownership and other socialist proposals are considered no longer seriously contemplated; and the present drift of both public and executive authorities toward a plan that will accord fair treatment not only to labor but also to the public and to the owners of the railroads; the last two divisions having been almost entirely forgotten. There are also a number of shipping bills before congress which call for early consideration, if we are to avoid injurious confusion in our newly devalued shipping industry, which is handicapped enough without having to face laggard and unwise legislation.

William Allen White, noted newspaper editor of Kansas, who spoke here Saturday on his observations of the league of nations derived from personal visits in Paris, took the sensible road, a road removed from radicalism by the knowledge that peace must be secured. His scoring of Wilson as a one man ruler was tempered with his belief in the league of nations as a whole, as the only surety for the world.

The newspapers are sure of one long story for the next 21 days. President Wilson has covered five of his 26 days of speech-making in the interests of the peace treaty. When he speaks, however short it is expected to be, we have failed to acclaim and on the shortness. When Wilson gets a chance to talk, he talks.

General Pershing, one leader who rose to prominence during the war days, whose reputation is still untrammelled by the rife of accusations and charges, was due to dock in New York today. General Pershing has done the difficult. He has gained and held the affectionate roll of the hero of the people.

The death of John Cavell, nurse martyr of England, has been reckoned for us far as mortals are able. George Gaston Quisen, convicted of her betrayal, has been condemned of the hero of the people.

WHEN YOU'VE GOT A BIRTHDAY COMING.

When you've got a birthday coming, and you're a young fellow, you're getting bigger every day. When the babe's too much to handle and the oldest's most a man, it is then that you discover just how short's the span. Of the years that God allows you, and you sit and dwell upon. The days of all your gladness, and you wonder where they've gone.

When you've got a birthday coming, and you look around and see a grown-up son beside you where a toddler used to be. And a smiling little lady comes and asks you: "May she go to a dance with Jimmy Someone," and you know that he's her beau.

Then the whole panorama of your life goes whirling by. And you realize that minute just how fast the ages fly.

When you've got a birthday coming, and a sweet voice in your ear breaks the starting information that you've spent another year. Then you think of all the sorrows and the joys which you have known since the long-remembered yesterday you claimed her for your own; then held her closer to you, and you fall you want to cry. And you wish the days of gladness wouldn't rush so swiftly by.

DANZIG.

When the peace conference decided to give the city and port of Danzig to the new state of Poland, Danzig observed a week of mourning. All amusements were closed, and dirges and other sad tunes were played in the restaurants instead of the usual sprightly music.

This spell of municipal depression was intended to express the resentment of the Danzig people at being separated from Germany, for 95 percent of them are Germans. After the week of mourning the city resumed its usual gay life and seemed to accept its fate with resignation, not to say indifference.

Danzig, located at the mouth of the Vistula river, is an excellent port and the only one which Poland has. It thus becomes the outlet for a nation of 36,000,000 people, and as such its importance is bound to grow. Danzig is a very old city. It was an important part long ago, when it was a member of the Hanseatic league. During the last 100 years it has declined both as a port and as a tourist city, and its recent change of status has really benefited it a great deal.

The city looks its age. It is beautifully built of stone, many of the houses erected by the rich merchants of Hanseatic days still remaining along the streets. Slender towers, gro-

Q. Does the widow of a soldier continue to get her war risk insurance if she remarries? P. L. I.

Q. What is an air pocket? N. T. H. A. When an airplane is traveling at the rate of 50 miles an hour there is a pressure of air against its wings that keeps it up. ## CHECK FORGER WHO USED PARKER'S NAME ARRESTED IN FRISCO

Apprehension of George F. Fish, alleged embezzler who is believed to have swindled nearly a score of eastern hotels of cash aggregating close to $2,000 by using checks of George S. Parker, this city, has been made in San Francisco, Calif., according to telegrams received yesterday by Mr. Parker from the San Francisco office.

Mr. Parker placed the matter in the hands of the American Hotel Protective association, which, it is believed, will proceed with the prosecution immediately.

Fish was taken into custody at the Hotel St. Francis in San Francisco, Saturday, attempting to repeat his forgery, which had netted him so much capital in eastern cities during the spring. It was the first time anything had been heard from him for four months, although it is believed he may have cashed some checks on the Parker Pen company during the past week which have not yet been returned.

According to Mr. Parker, Fish worked his trick cleverly and successfully in Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Greensburg, S. C., and a number of other southern cities before being arrested. He posed as a traveling representative of the Parker Pen company and had checks signed by Mr. Parker which he used to obtain money and which he presented to hotel clerks who would unhesitatingly cash them.

Invades Northwest.
On Board President Wilson's Special Train, Sept. 8.—Carrying his appeal for acceptance of the peace treaty into the heart of the northwest, President Wilson began today a week of travel that will take him over the Rockies and to the Pacific coast.

Two addresses were on the president's crowded schedule again today. He spoke in Omaha and the other in Sioux Falls, S. D. Departing at midnight from Des Moines, Iowa, where he had spent Sunday, the president was scheduled to begin his tour of the west at Omaha some hours before he reached Omaha, but he wanted to sleep late and local plans had been adjusted so that he would arrive in Des Moines.

Mr. Wilson was said to be in excellent trim, but Dr. Grayson will insist that he take things as easy as possible.

It was principally on account of a slight cold impairing the president's voice that Dr. Grayson prescribed against rear platform speaking.

On the president's private car "Mayflower" this president and Mrs. Wilson are well taken care of. Mrs. Wilson's maid came along and there is one of the White House chefs with him to prepare their meals.

The dining car is to be carried all the way and there is a club car which the newspaper correspondents, secret service men and secretaries use as a lounge.

The president and Mrs. Wilson dine privately, but Mr. Wilson strolls back into the club car occasionally for a chat with the other members of the train. The latest newspapers, and weather forecast for the town ahead is received daily by telegraph from the nearest weather bureau.

His flight is busy.

One of the hardest working members of the presidential party is Charles L. Swen, Mr. Wilson's personal stenographer, who handles single-handed the official transcript of the president's addresses. He has an official stenographic record of 254 words a minute. As soon as an address is completed, Mr. Swen transcribes it on the record of a mimeograph machine aboard the train so that official copies of the text may be available without delay.

HOW HE DOES IT.

"How can he be so disagreeable and unreasonable?" said my neighbor emphatically.

She was talking about the husband of another neighbor. The latter was making his wife's life wretched because, on account of her mother's illness, he had to be away from home off and on for some weeks. This had upset the domestic arrangements and interfered with his comfort—and so when she came home, he would be so ugly and sulky that she was on the verge of a nervous breakdown from the double strain.

The Neighbors Hold a Caucus on the subject.

"Would he have her do anything at all for her sick mother?" said another of the caucus of neighbors who had his case under consideration.

"He says her sister ought to do more," suggested some one.

"But she has four children and his wife has only one, and his sister is very glad to look after his little girl when she is away," explained some one else.

"Well," said the first woman who had spoken, "I simply cannot understand how anyone can be so thoroughly mean."

I started to say "Amen" to that in my mind, and then that queer quirk in me that insists I shall consider the other side of things got to working. "I suppose he must think that he is abused in some way," I thought and tried to imagine how he put the thing up to himself.

The Case He Makes Out for Himself.

Of course he dwelt on the fact that the other sister doesn't do her share, and tells himself that he'd be glad to do his share but he hates to have things put over on him. (I've heard him express that feeling.) And then he probably pictures himself coming some dead tired at night to an empty house and indulges in an orgy of selfishness.

And then he tells himself that his wife is apt to be over-considerate, and that very likely she is doing more than she needs to. (He is always saying that.)

And just by dwelling on those facts and shutting out all others, he makes himself feel thoroughly justified—when, as a matter of fact there is nothing else his wife could possibly do.

People Don't Make Up Their Minds to other facts.

So Mean.

You see, people don't make up their minds to be thoroughly mean. They don't admit that they are going to be selfish and irritable. No, they build up a justification like the one this man built up, and then they turn their backs on the other side of the case.

One is reminded of the story of the newly made negro judge of carpet-bagging days who, having heard one side of the case, said that was all he needed to hear—that he would give a verdict at once for the plaintiff. He was persuaded to hear the defendant's case and, scratching his head, he muttered, "Now, ain't that funny? He's the man that's right, after all!"

When you cannot understand the way anyone acts, fit this key and see if it doesn't work. Picture him building up such a justification and looking at it determinedly with his back to all other facts.

And don't forget to ask yourself when the one person for whose acts you are responsible, is dwelling on a grievance whether he, too, is doing that sort of thing.

The medical department of a Western city maintains a list of the names of persons who are willing to submit to blood transfusion. The persons are carefully examined and listed. Usually much time is lost in finding suitable persons and in giving them the necessary examination.

THE WISHING PLANE

"When the man who had come out of Sergeant Yost's tent dressed like a native passed our tent, we saw it was Yost," said Sir Sprigg, going on with the story of the machine gunner.

"Then I remembered that several times he had painted himself up like an African to help out the soldiers in their vaudeville shows."

"He smiled at us as he went past and in the next minute was lost in the darkness."

"We spent the day getting ready to hold off the natives as best we could the next night, but most of us thought that the next morning would find us all killed or prisoners. As soon as night came we could hear the natives yelling and getting ready to attack us again.

"And then, all of a sudden, we heard a machine gun open up, right in the center of their camp. It just hummed and we could see by the flashes from it that it was moving right around in a circle. The natives began to yell more than ever, but they didn't attack us. They started as fast as they could for the hills. We could hear their voices growing fainter and fainter."

"We realized what Yost had done."

Sham Gasoline Is Motor Poison

You might be willing to put up with missing and sluggish running, if the mischief of poor "cracked" sham gasoline stopped with that.

But it doesn't! Those "inconveniences" are in reality deadly symptoms of motor destruction. They are the external signs of the slow poison that is eating its venomous way to the very heart of your car, while its true label is covered up by the wily camouflage of printed guff about quality.

Each miss means a racking, pounding jerk at every joint in the power line, and the next explosion that does fire means a worse one.

Carbon collects rapidly and the constant fussing at the motor for frequent cleaning and valve grinding means expense, lay-ups and risk of spoiled adjustments.

Raw kerosene left behind after every explosion sluices the lubricant from your cylinders, invades your crank case and while fooling you by showing a high level in your gauge, is diluting the oil to the point of uselessness, and menacing every bearing of your motor.

Unexploded charges collect in the muffler, frequently wrecking it and even causing fire, when set off later by the hot exhaust.

In contrast to this "cracked" product, malformed and malicious, is old-fashioned

Heart and Home Problems

BY ELIZABETH THOMPSON
LETTERS MAY BE ADDRESSED TO MRS. THOMPSON, IN CARE OF THE GAZETTE

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I don't suppose I need to tell you, I never did get to the coast, but this is proof enough of a brainstorm. I mean my writing again after giving my word I wouldn't. The important one of my cousins, the aviator, got the flu soon after I wrote. He didn't last long after pneumonia set in and then had called my trip off. With him gone, I wasn't so crazy about it anyway. He was in all kinds of heavy fighting for 13 months over there and came home only with a few scars and a punctured lung.

My dad read your answer to me, for he handed it to me with the remark that he wondered what I'd be up to next. That made me pretty sore, especially when he said I'd be up to about it afterward. But he won't get a chance to read this. I'll see to that. I want to correct something I said last time about flunking one of my studies. It was positive I did it, but when I got my grades I found I had just made it.

This sort of vacation has no charm for me. A fellow gets tired of movies and pleasures and food and savanahs. I know how well I am minding. I'd like just for one happy month to do what I please—stroll downtown Saturday nights, take a car for some joy rides, drink all the time I want, have some swells in the river, see the inside of a dance garden for once, trade my V. S. stamps for a canoe, get up any old time I please and lounge around Sunday. I don't think any of these things for church. Doesn't that sound exciting? But see, it would be a treat. No danger of my getting a chance, though, not this side of 21 anyway. I'll surely do some celebrating then, believe me.

Would you mind settling a matter of dispute? Dad insists on my raising my cap to my sister lately. I claim it's all nonsense. I do it, of course, for I haven't any choice. But would you consider that necessary? She is only 13.

Many thanks for your help, and

FIGHTING THE "SYSTEM"

"Say, Ann, I bet you never heard of this paper," said Bernard, catching her glance of surprise, fished then on his pocket. "It's called 'Rafetsky' and we got to saying something about that soap-box speaker over on Union square. Rafetsky nearly died of joy when I told him I was interested. He'd dug up three copies of the paper. He takes it every day, it seems, whether they have anything to eat or not. I been glancing over it, and say, it's great! Talk about standing 'em up! 'System'—well, this'll surprise you!"

"I know something," said Annie, then surprised you. Your lawlud woulded wife was in a food riot today, and marched down in a procession to call on the mayor at city hall."

"Wha-a-a-a-t!" Bernie followed his mate, into the small, smoky kitchen, where she was "dishing up" the boiled cod and potatoes.

"Exactly that," said Annie demurely. "Here, Bern, put the bread and butter on, will you, and tie Dave's bib. Everything's ready. I'll tell you afterward all about the riot and how I didn't meet the mayor."

When the story had been told and Bernie's chin and by gosh's and you don't mean it had run their course, his face settled into seriousness.

"Nance," he said, gazing out over the vacant lot, past the ugly gas-houses, past the untidy backs of tenements farther south, his eyes narrowed considerably. "Nance, those socialists fellows have the right dope. I'm working for $2 a day, and working as hard as I can at the only job I can get. You are working as hard as you can at your job. And yet we can't get enough out of our labor to keep our three children and ourselves decently fed and clothed, and our rent paid."

TONSILLITIS

Familiarity with disease too frequently breeds a dangerous contempt for it. Tonsillitis is so prevalent in the seasons, when respiratory infections spread (fall and spring) that most of the lathy and some of the doctors for it is a serious illness. With cardiovascular disease (heart, artery, kidney degeneration) increasing year after year, with joint infections (rheumatism) occurring annually, with valvular heart disease cropping out everywhere without apparent cause, and all sorts of painful and disabling maladies resulting from focal infections, it seems that tonsillitis ought to command respect.

There are several elementary principles concerning tonsillitis which will bear inspection.

(1) Acute tonsillitis of whatever variety is infectious, although the causative bacteria may produce more sore throat or coryza (head "cold") in A. follicular tonsillitis or pneumonia in R. The infection is conveyed precisely like other respiratory infections, such as diphtheria, pneumonia, tuberculosis, scarlet fever, etc., by means of the secretions of nose and throat, the spray of sneezing and coughing.

(2) If the fever is high with an acute sore throat, that is a favorable sign; if the fever is low, under 101, that suggests diphtheria.

(3) Wisdom and economy prompt rigid confinement in bed as long as there is any feverishness or sore throat. Neglect of this precaution in throat. Neglect of this precaution in moderate tonsillitis is the explanation for many serious complicating valvular troubles which manifest themselves only after the lapse of months or years, perhaps.

(4) Further the physician is consulted in case of sore throat, the better the chance of warding off serious trouble and shortening the period of illness. Often if the physician can advise, the attack may be aborted or at least greatly modified.

(5) Frequent (half-hourly) gargling or rinsing the throat with mouthfuls held closed) with a solution of boric acid in boiled water as hot as bearable, is perhaps the best local medication a patient can employ without medical attendance in case of acute sore throat.

(6) Usually in such an illness it is well to take an active saline cathartic at the beginning, such as a bottle of freshly prepared solution of Epsom salts, or a dose of Epsom salts with or without Seidlitz powder for effectiveness.

(7) The diet while fever is present attractive in appearance.

Water Cress Salad—Put in salad-bowl a layer of cress, then add a layer of boiled and sliced carrots, then a layer of cold boiled beef. Mash with salad dressing, sprinkle with a few capers, and a bit of pimento. Very good looking and very satisfying. The following is a recipe for salad dressing: One teaspoon dry mustard, one-half teaspoon salt, one-quarter teaspoon paprika, two tablespoons sugar, two tablespoons flour, two tablespoons butter, one egg or two yolks.

Mix dry ingredients, add egg, vinegar and water, blend with butter, cook until thick.

Daisy Salad—Arrange leaves of lettuce, putting two leaves together to form a shell, rub yolks of four hard-boiled eggs through a strainer and moisten with salad dressing. Cut whites in rings. Place on lettuce for daisy petals and yolks in center. Serve more dressing with the salad.

Rice Vegetable Salad—One-half cup each celery, carrots and rice. Marinate all separately with French dressing. Arrange on lettuce leaves in shape of a mound, having rice at the bottom and carrots at the top.

The lady's red lips curved scornfully, then tolerantly. "What right had she to sit in judgment? Hadn't most of her aristocratic ancestors been in the aristocratic men? Why should I chide you, Alexander, she observed softly, "for the manner in which you anticipate spending the reward I am going to bestow upon you, for bestowing upon me your own, your fortunes, and last but not least, your non-affections?"

"Oh, it's you," said Alexander. So she was the one who wanted to marry him. "But why?"

"Pooh!" she returned. "Why get categorical? What must be, must be! Isn't that sufficient? Think of the reward if you must think of it. Alexander did not. He asked no more questions.

"That is well," said the lady. "I sure get the two thousand?"

"On the word of a gentleman of a belted coat," said the lady.

"That sounded good enough for Alexander," said the lady. "When do you want it to take place?" he asked stolidly.

"Say day after tomorrow," she said. "You see, I have my trousseau to prepare."

"Which?" said Alexander.

"A wedding gown, in keeping with my new lofty station," said the lady. "One you mean scrub-woman's clothes?" said Alexander practically. "Maybe I swipe some for you, somewhere."

"No, please don't swipe my wedding garments," Alexander, said the lady. "Have you no sentiment? Please acquire them by purchase from some old-clothes man, I slipped him some places of mine. Only be secretive. This is need."

"You bet! I get you," said Alexander. "But for the reward was already in his eyes. This thing might be a little more to me."

"The lady sighed. Anyhow, he looked very big and powerful, as he spoke. It would be nice to shift some of the responsibility of the reward to Alexander's brawn and her brains something might be accomplished."

"And now trot along and see the priest," she said.

Alexander trotted. The diu was east. She had burned her bridges.

CHAPTER III

The flight
A train sped northward! A third-class compartment! Hour after hour the train had been speeding. Now suddenly it stopped.

"The frontier!" A guard looked in the door of the train. "The people get out—let the baggage go!" One man—a big fellow—yet slept in a corner, and snored—or seemed to.

"Here, wake your good man, woman," cried the guard to her at the sleeper's side.

She did. The uncouth-looking fellow rubbed his eyes sleepily. Then he reached up for a bundle of old clothes. Then the man, followed by the woman, approached Officialdom. The examination of their papers took some moments. Once the woman seemed to sway from weakness or some other emotion. Her hand clutched the man's arm. He cooly thrust the bundle of old clothes into her arms.

"Here, you hold 'em," he said. "The 'duds' made quite a fine lot; held to her breast, she partly concealed the woman's face."

"Learn 'em young," said the man, with a sardonic grin at Officialdom. "The peasants' philosophy! Start woman carrying things as soon as she's married and she's more likely to keep up the habit. Officialdom, laughed harshly. He understood that ungenteel grinding down womanhood for generations—keeping woman "in her place." Trust your son of the soil for that.

"Just married, eh?" said Officialdom, surveying a number of papers.

"Yes," said the woman, with a sardonic grin. "With a lot of papers."

Officialdom peered around the "old duds."

"Say little dove!"

"You bet! I tell her what she get, she look at a man. Coarsely."

"Beginning right, all right!"

Digner Stories

The lady could not get a boat the first day, so had to wait until the next day. She was sitting on a bench on the beach, he appeared in the morning, spick and span—for him—and appeared as fresh as a daisy. In fact, disinterested and anxious living seemed to agree with Alexander; he looked like a man who had retired seasonably, slept soundly, and had risen with good conscience in the morning. No good conscience of late. He would have suspected him of wild debauches and untimely revelry.

The lady had left word that he was to be admitted to the hotel parlor, and a great many people were waiting to see him. He was a great man, and his wishes were respected, if secretly resented, by the disgruntled keeper of the establishment. He gave Alexander the berth, as that individual entered with a tread of a gladiator. Then the proprietor shrugged his shoulders. Her ladyship was incomprehensible, but she had seemed to that to a great many people, before this.

Alexander found a transformed lady. She had evidently been shopping, and had established a line. She substituted a wonderful Paris gown, and the faintest of shoes. Her golden hair was no longer brushed straight back but was a natural curl. He looked at the gown, and then he looked at the shoes. "Where you get all that?" he said.

"At the shops."

"Cost a lot."

"Quite a lot."

Alexander pondered. "Good wives, in my country, don't spend money," he observed.

"I suppose not," said the lady calmly.

"No woman could work, in that," was Alexander's next comment.

Alexander pointed an accusing finger. "Too small," he said with a frown.

"My shoes? Pardon me," said the lady.

"What you do with the others?"

"I throw them away."

"Good shoes like that!" indignantly.

"You will find them reposing in some rubbish heap," tranquilly.

"Rubbish heap!" cried Alexander.

"What?"

"I really couldn't locate it for you."

Laquility.

Alexander pondered some more. Apparently he gave up the shoes for lost.

"You throw away the dress, too?"

"Of course."

"Fine clothes!" Alexander looked depressed. "I don't like wife, like that," he said.

"So sorry you disapprove of me, Alexander!" The lady was beginning to enjoy herself once more. The psychology of Alexander was mildly entertaining.

"You keep shawl!" said Alexander.

"Maybe I get something for that."

"Go, Alexander."

He breathed deeply. "All those fine things!"

The lady laughed. Not once had Alexander really looked at her! And yet the long mirror reflected a radiant presence; a vision of youth and loveliness. In her was something reassuring about Alexander.

"When we leave?" he next asked.

"Are you anxious to go? Are the wineshops not to your liking?" she asked frivolously.

"Wineshops all right."

"But you are thinking of the reward? The sooner we go, the quicker you get that?"

Playing with a crippled line-up, Janesville lost a hard fought game at Manitowoc yesterday, 9 to 3, helping the Shipbuilders in their mad dash for the Shore League pennant and also for the City bunch. So occupied were the Janesville players that they failed to manage the team, were forced to play in right field. Some of the new men in the lineup were not in the lineup when the game started, and the manager says they did not start at all.

New Pitcher Work
Minster, who pitched for the Janesville team, had a very good game yesterday, throwing three innings of perfect work, allowing but eight hits. The Janesville players, however, were not up to the task of playing with a crippled line-up. The Janesville players, however, were not up to the task of playing with a crippled line-up. ## Squirrels Go Fishing for Turtles

Bethany, W. Va.—Squirrels that go fishing after turtles inhabit Hog Creek, near here. At least Jack Hurley, an oil driller, says they do. There are still some tricks left that the naturalists haven't discovered, said Hurley, and the squirrel that goes fishing is one of them. Not knocking taste at all

Of course, we're not knocking taste. Chesterfields have taste, and it's some taste, too. But there's more than taste to Chesterfields

They do what every smoker has always wished a cigarette would do. They go straight to your "smoke-spot". They satisfy. And Chesterfields alone can do this. Because the formula for the Chesterfield blend is the manufacturer's secret. Unlike a patent, it cannot be copied or even closely imitated. Only Chesterfields can truly say—

Moisture—proof package keeps them firm and fresh, whatever the weather.
